Voice students from Shelton State's music department are introducing art music to elementary school children through a program called 'Bach to Rock.' The students sing selections of solo vocal literature from the last 400 years, demonstrating how art songs are sung, and how today's audiences can learn to appreciate them.

Also on the program are songs from the popular genres of rock, gospel, country, and musical theater. More than 12 students are participating in "Bach to Rock" which is scheduled for 15 different area schools. Glinda Blackshear, music instructor at the college, coordinates the program.
